MB One of the down side of the Olympics starting in China was that China decided to close down some factories, because they were polluting the environment around China. Saccharine is an ingredient that we put in toothpaste, at a relatively small level, to make it slightly sweeter, as a taste. The most, the majority of the saccharine produced today in the world comes from China, and suddenly there was a panic. We may not be able to produce toothpaste any more, because toothpaste isn't available. So you have to start scrambling around to find, what else can we put in the toothpaste that plays the same role as saccharine? Until the Chinese would put this factory back?
